Wait for me! Would you mind? (Kids' Questions about Life) (Volume 2) Agnes Deglon

Wait for me! Would you mind?* won the Early Reader/Picture Book Unpublished category from the 2016 Royal Palm Literary Award.

Wait for me! Would you mind? is the second installment of a series on body, mind, and soul, called Kids' Questions about Life. It is an educational book written in simple language for parents, teachers, and kids who are pondering the deeper, more complex but yet so essential issues of life: an early introduction to who we are and how the mind works.

Explaining the complexity of the human mind to children can be quite challenging. Abstract concepts, thoughts, ideas, imagination, focus, and attention are made more tangible and easily understandable through a family of bears. As the Teddy kids ask questions, Mommy Bear and Daddy Bear seek to answer their little ones with simplicity and honesty.

The awareness that we perceive the world through our limited senses and that there is more out there than what we initially think helps broaden our horizons and open us up to a greater reality. Knowing about the mind's way of thinking and becoming aware of the presence of more than we perceive is essential. The mind becomes our tool rather than our identity. We become more capable of distancing ourselves, of choosing what we want to believe and what kind of information to feed our minds.
