How to Become An Entrepreneurial Kid: Three Inspiring Stories and a Simple Business Plan Workbook Dianne Linderman

No matter how young children are, they can learn responsibility. Taking an idea from beginning to end takes responsibility, integrity, and character. Failures are just as educational as successes and should be made fun. I believe that inspiring children to be entrepreneurial is the best way to teach any academic subject. It gives them an appreciation of value and work and a reason to put reading, writing, and math to use. It also enables them to mature with character. Today's American youth are bored with meaningless distractions. We are losing the foundation of quality on which America was built. Let's plant their feet in fertile soil and let them blossom with self-respect, confidence, industry, and fun.
