Steven Adler, M.D. has it all. He's chief ER resident in the busiest Trauma Center in Orange County, has never lost a viable patient, and is so skilled that his fellow residents give him their worst cases. Adler never loses. Give him a critically injured "crunch," a scoop-and-run accident victim from the Ortega Highway, and he's in his element: fearless, skilled and relentless, he's clearly on top of his take-no-prisoners Trauma specialty. Then there's Adler's love life-it's on life support and barely has a pulse. He's surrounded by beautiful nurses, cops, and doctors, but hasn't found the woman who can compete with his job. Six months from graduation, Adler runs into his old med-school classmate, Natalie Bogner, M.D., in the most unusual circumstances imaginable. Natalie, the unapproachable, beautiful OB resident with an IQ of 178 represents everything Adler's been waiting for: a career woman who can speak his language, understand his stress, and take the edge off his burning ambition. A woman who could help balance his life. Six PM Sunday is a medical drama with heart. A cautionary tale that exemplifies the adage, "be careful what you wish for." Six PM Sunday combines searing family drama reminiscent of "Kramer v Kramer" with the very best medical scenes millions of viewers watch weekly on "House," "Grey's Anatomy," and "ER." Snap on a pair of gloves and come stand at Steven Adler's elbow as he gives the reader a close-up view of the "Real ER." A chaotic, frightening and exciting place where we'd all be lucky to meet Steven Adler, M.D.
